at a large farm near Unggi (330-24, 42-21) (FB 1589), 42 persons began the first training class for agents of the Far Eastern Political Security Troops. The 42 individuals, selected from approximately 300 hundred members of the police, the Ministry of Social Security, and intelligence units of the North Korean army, who had been tested near Pyongyang in early August by written and physical examinations and loyalty checks, were to be trained for six months for service.

The course of study for the individuals, all members of the North Korean Labor Party, included foreign languages, propaganda, radio communication, photography, disguise, espionage, subversion, and social etiquette.

Each of the instructors at the training center spoke several languages and had had espionage and intelligence training or experience in the Soviet Union. Classes were being held between 7 a.m. and 10 a.m. and between 6 p.m. and 10 p.m. Between 10 a.m. and 6 p.m., the students engaged in farming activities. Military discipline was not enforced at the school, and the relationship between instructor and student was friendly.

The Far Eastern Political Security Troops were known as the Soviet-China-North Korean Joint Intelligence Operations Troops (Soryon Chungkong Puk-chusun Hap Toeg Hong Chak Pong Po Dae) among low echelon North Korean units. In recruiting the students police and local administrative organizations had been asked to submit names of persons suitable for political training in Manchuria. Those persons not selected for the school at Unggi were moved to Manchuria.

By 12 August the office of the farm had been converted into classrooms, and the homes of farm employees into dormitories. By the end of November a small landing strip was to have been constructed near the farm to accommodate light aircraft. Four Soviet jeeps and three Soviet trucks were being used by the center.
